Programmes

Principal Teaching Fellow

WMG; University of Warwick,

UK

Michael Newton worked as a project manager and consultant with GEC before joining Warwick Manufacturing Group. Since then he has worked closely with national and international clients to develop organisational capability and create new MSc courses in the field of project and programme management. He has taught extensively overseas. In 2011 he was invited by Beijing Academy of Science and Technology to become an acknowledged foreign expert for the purpose of teaching in China. He now teaches project cost performance and leads WMG's international programmes in 10 different overseas centres.

Synopsis:

Cost Performance on Major Projects and Programmes

How good or bad is project cost performance on major projects and programs in different industries and different countries? What are the factors that drive good or bad cost performance and how can we ensure better predictability of cost on major projects and programs?
